At 6A the first dump truck was queued on The site manager and crew arrived late at 7:20A; perhaps they were stuck in the infamous Military Road traffic, shown at the left of the site. Baby backhoe spent the early morning digging down the northwest retaining walls. A white, full-jumpsuit with orange helmet. At 9:20A, let the trucking begin -- and for the rest of the day, the dump trucks came in caravans to remove the site, with both the backhoe and the dump trucks. Much like yesterday, a constant flow of work but little drama. What was noticeable was the flatness of two thirds of the site. Another full day of constructions activity around the whole site. Over eighty dump truck loads of dirt left the site. Note, the webcam covers a little more than the middle third of the site. A beautiful red and gold sunrise lead into the Ballet of the Backhoes. At 9:45A the baby backhoe took front center stage for a few minutes. At 7:03A on a Saturday morning, the neighborhood was awaked by the blast of an air horn, and by 7:10A there were nine dump trucks. Early to bed and early to rise, sure helps you manage construction surprise.. Again at 7:01A, the large backhoe was grinding and leveling. Promptly at 7A the big backhoe was a work -- with all accompanying engine roar and back-up beeps -- spreading gravel on north side. The backhoe buried the pool of water in the center of the site, then proceeded to pull down the old retaining wall on the far side. ... the large backhoe and a string of dump trucks continued removing the mound of dirt along the wall. The activity was the same as the last two weeks although not as frenetic as the last several work days - crew on the retaining wall. From beautiful sunrise at 6A to 5P, full day of work on site. Before 7A the dump trucks were already queued on site. The Jurassic Giraffe (aka post hole digger/pile driver) came downstage today to give the webcam it's first good look at the happy site. ... Much of the activity is behind the street trees on
